Reservoir engineers estimate how much oil or gas can be recovered from underground deposits, known as reservoirs. They study reservoir characteristics and determine which methods will get the most oil or gas out of the reservoirs.

Job description

As a Reservoir engineer you will be responsible for utilizing broad Reservoir engineering experience to inform reserves estimation, resources progression and the appropriate Reservoir management activities and/or Carbon storage plans are implemented

You will have the opportunity to work across BP global portfolio on projects as diverse as early field development offshore West Africa, large-scale waterflood developments in the Caspian Sea and Middle East and global screening and development of Carbon Capture and Storage (CCS) fields

You will be responsible for supporting region decisions on reserves estimation, Reservoir management, and production forecasting

What you will deliver

Work closely with the regions across the globe, utilizing broad classical Reservoir engineering methods to properly analyze and integrate wells and Reservoir data into the team's current understanding.

Conduct classical Reservoir engineering analyses, integrating rate and pressure transient analysis, material balance, decline curve and volumetric analyses into Reservoir evaluation and reserves estimation.

Provide sound Reservoir Engineering technical analysis, judgement, and guidance to support identification, evaluation, and progression of value-generating resources.

Provide technical support and guidance in delivery of projects and progression of resources.

Apply Reservoir engineering concepts to understand and optimize the production and recovery, Including Rock and fluid properties, relative permeability, and depletion mechanisms.

Promote hydrocarbon resources progression by assessing surveillance and analogue data, development activities and materiality, and working across multi-disciplines to provide input and justification for reserves/resources estimation and reporting, following company s guidelines.

Ensure subsurface products align to be s technical expectations for reserves estimation.

Collaborate with engineers in global teams to analyze field performance and advise on improving recovery.
