Google's projects, like our users, span the globe and require managers to keep the big picture in focus while being able to dive into the unique engineering challenges we face daily. As a Technical Program Manager at Google, you lead complex, multi-disciplinary engineering projects using your engineering expertise. You plan requirements with internal customers and usher projects through the entire project lifecycle. This includes managing project schedules, identifying risks and clearly communicating them to project stakeholders. You're equally at home explaining your team's analyses and recommendations to executives as you are discussing the technical trade-offs in product development with engineers.

Responsibilities:

Manage the delivery of large-scale network infrastructure projects involving long haul dark fiber, metro fiber, leased capacity/circuits, and inside plant fiber from inception through delivery.

Ensure facilities are delivered on schedule and meet technical specifications.

Serve as primary EMEA vendor contact. Escalate up vendor management chains as necessary if delivery timelines are at risk.

Lead project status meetings while keeping teams at Google aware of project and delivery status.

Requirements:

Experience with program management in the wireline carrier telecom industry

Familiarity with inside plant fiber construction and routing

Familiarity with outside plant fiber construction and routing
